Boersma Receives NCIDQ Certification

Angela Boersma, Architectural Intern and Interior Designer at Mills Construction, Inc., successfully completed the National Council for Interior Design Qualification (NCIDQ) Exams, making her fully qualified by education, experience, and examination for the professional practice of interior design in all of its facets and sectors, including public and private buildings. More than 30,000 professionals around the world have earned the prestigious NCIDQ Certification, which requires ongoing commitment to not only the creation of functional and aesthetically pleasing spaces, but also building interiors that meet and/or exceed current code and safety standards. Professional Interior design licensure/registration is currently required in 26 states and Canadian provinces, and those numbers are growing annually.

Angela has been a faculty member in the Interior Design program at SDSU since 2009, and has been working in conjunction with Mills Construction's in-house design team since 2012.
